UGA Students in South Africa:
UGA has enjoyed a strong and extensive partnership with South Africa over the past decade. In addition to the standard Study Abroad and student exchange programs, UGA students have also travelled to South Africa in pursuit of legal clerkships, teaching internships, and service learning projects. For the 2014-2015 academic year, South Africa is hosting 30 UGA students, all of whom are participating in one of the programs outlined below.

Globis Study Abroad Program in Stellenbosch:
The Center for the Study of Global Issues (Globis) in UGA’s School of Public and International Affairs offers a study abroad program which focuses on South Africa’s transitions from apartheid to democracy and from economic isolation to integration into the global economy. Hosted by Stellenbosch University, students consider issues such as the design of political institutions and their effect on social conflicts and the relationship between poverty and economic and social development. The program includes a two-week service-learning assignment in the township of Kayamandi.

Student Exchange with Stellenbosch University:
UGA’s Franklin College of Arts and Sciences and School of Public and International Affairs are implementing a university-wide reciprocal student exchange with Stellenbosch University. Stellenbosch University is set in a college town in the Winelands region of the Western Cape and is one of Africa’s premier research and teaching institutions. As the only African member of the G20 group and the dominant economy on the African continent, South Africa exerts a significant influence on regional and global affairs. UGA students will have a long term and immersive experience, enrolling with local faculty and students. In turn, UGA will host Stellenbosch students, broadening the perspective in Athens.

Cape Peninsula University of Technology:
UGA’s College of Education and the Dean of Informatics at Cape Peninsula University of Technology are collaborating on joint research to expand knowledge in the area of online learning and instruction using mobile communication devices. UGA is actively involved in the development and sponsorship of the annual International Conference on Design, Development & Research at Cape Peninsula.

South African Students and Scholars in Athens:
For the 2014-2015 academic year, UGA hosted eight South African students, half of which were pursuing graduate degrees in a broad range of fields.
